In India Children living in streets, construction sites and slums accounts for major share of the children who are deprived of basic elementary education. According to a survey done in the past by Indian government stated that half of the education deprived children comes from these sectors.

In India millions of unskilled porters, bricklayers and other low-caste laborers have left their native villages to escape extreme rural poverty and to find a job in big cities. These migrant workers are spread across the country and travel from one area of work to another along with their families. They live in temporary settlements, sometimes provided by the construction company, for the duration of the construction project and then move to another site.

Apart from being deprived of the education, the children also remain deprived of safe drinking water; clean sanitation facilities and ways of obtain hygiene practices. They remain unaware from many government schemes about education, food, safe drinking water, health, sanitation etc. We identified these problems and issues to bring life of the children into the mainstream of society. We are working towards in creating a knowledge society.

We are working on to create a Interactive model of education , where we teach children by increasing interactive learning , play and study method among the teachers volunteers and children. We encourage a more inclusive model of education where teachers, volunteers can taught children in small groups by play and learn method; we have included the following innovative learning methods to teach children:

- Animated Teaching Videos
- Audio : Learning through stories and plays

- Games and role play activities

We are constantly working on to achieve the following for a bright and educated street and migrated laborer children:
